主席的話

新聞影像最基本的功能和責任是如實地、客觀地、盡可能全面地反映新聞事件，但這絕不只是它的唯一用途。無論是反修例風波還是肆虐全球的新冠肺炎，每天在大小媒體上呈現的新聞照片或許只是當天新聞事件的鳳毛麟角，攝影記者作為歷史初稿的記錄者，無論在有形的槍彈、或是無形的病毒面前，從不缺席。這些新鮮的材料一旦加上歲月作為調味料，待日後重新回望時就是永恆的經典，就如我們今天重看淘大花園、廣場上的老照片那樣五味雜陳。

攝影記者經常聽到讀者抱怨「睇唔明張相」，這或許有點像我們到博物館看印象派油畫時的感覺。圖片說明有時只交待了時間、人物和地點，但卻不負責繙譯內容。正如年度照片那樣，攝影記者捕捉的一個畫面可能只是一種精神狀態、一種情緒，這個狀態不是靠閱讀而是要意會的。

一本講述 Magnum 攝影師故事的傳記稱呼這些偉大的歷史見證者為「揹相機的革命家」，這種說法套用在當今香港社會可能動輒被扣上危害國家安全的帽子。如果說照片能顛覆甚麼，那極其是受眾的思想和眼界。不過獨立思想在當權者眼中很可能是危險的武器，正如 Hannah Arendt 所說：「there is no dangerous thoughts, thinking itself is dangerous」，難怪箝制思想從來都是極權最常用的技倆。

這本圖集不但是過去一年部份香港大事的歷史回顧，更是向一直堅守崗位的攝影記者致敬的一份見證。

《飛越 2020 寫在城市的風景》

就在 2020，想起無腳雀仔的意象，想起張國榮，自憐自傷浪子對白：「你知不知道有一種雀仔沒有腳？我聽人家說，世上有一種雀仔是沒有腳的，牠只可以一直飛，累了便在風中睡覺，這種雀仔一輩子只可以落地一次，就是牠死的時候。」一個 1997 前香港人狀態的寓言。

然而，受過雨傘運動和反修例運動洗禮的城市，回歸 23 年，飛到 2020，無腳雀仔長了腳，只是躊躇，根著何處？

Flying through 2020: the Landscape written on the City

<Bird>

In 2020, I thought about the image of a footless bird, a line which the self-pity character played by Leslie Cheung Kwok-wing says "I was told that, there is a kind of a footless bird, it can fly endlessly, sleeping in the wind when getting tired. It only lands on the ground once in its life, which is its death." It is a fable of the situation of Hong Kong before 1997. However, after the umbrella movement and the Anti-Extradition Law Amendment Bill Movement, the footless bird has grown its feet, only hesitating, where is its root?

01

2020 年 1 月 22 日，首宗確診個案是一名內地男子，之後香港經歷四波疫情，截至 2020 年 12 月 24 日共錄得 8354 宗 2019 冠狀病毒個案，135 宗死亡個案，單日最高確診人數為 149。

病毒的流行意味著隔離、停頓、焦慮。防疫措施在城裡畫上井然的界線，分隔人與人的距離，四處都有被圍封，四季都是戴口罩，由口罩荒走到口罩過剩，昔日浩瀚的街頭運動因限聚令和國安法而休止，回復平靜的街道，陸續出現吉舖待售，食肆六時後禁止堂食，聖誕夜不應該更高興。

2019 年反修例運動後，城內頓時充滿紀念日，721、831、69、615、1112……2019 年 6 月 9 日至 2020 年 11 月 30 日，10171 人被捕，2389 人被檢控，695 人被控暴動。由昔日聚合足以包圍河岸的人鏈，到 2020 零星燈光，法庭外是送行的人在道上追逐囚車，黑色玻璃背後的人是誰？閃燈無法穿透。運動寫在牆上的痕跡猶在，塗鴉被清刷而留白，問題卻關乎記憶，無論走多遠，一道橋、一條路、一舊磚、一縷煙，自成一面鏡子。

我城，2020 將盡，2019 仍未結束。

<Boundary>

The first confirmed case is a mainlander on January 22, 2020. After that, Hong Kong experienced 4 waves of the pandemic, 135 deaths and 8354 cases of Covid-19 up until December 24, 2020. The pandemic means quarantine, standstill and anxiety. Pandemic prevention measures have drawn boundaries in the city. People are segregated with distances. Closures are seen everywhere. People wear masks no matter which season they are in. From scarcity of masks to now overstocked, large scale protests on the street are paused because of the social distancing measures and National Security Law. Empty shores started to appear on the now quiet street.

<2019～>

10171 people are arrested, 2389 are prosecuted, 695 are charged with rioting from June 9, 2019 to November 30, 2020. The human chain used to surround the whole riverside. Now the lights are sporadic in 2020. Supporters chase vehicles that hold the arrestees on the road outside the courthouse. Who is it behind the darkened glasses in the vehicle? The speedlite could not shine through the glass. The words written on the wall during the protest could still be seen. The graffiti is erased, but what matters are the memories. No matter how far away, a bridge, a road, a brick or smoke, could become a mirror. In our city, 2020 comes to an end, but 2019 still lives on.

2019 年香港反修例運動中，「光復香港，時代革命」口號響遍全城。這句本是本土民主前線前發言人梁天琦的競選口號，及後被香港政府認定為有「港獨」意味，顛覆國家、挑戰國家主權、統一和領土完整的行為。

2020 年 7 月 1 日，《港區國安法》通過後，叫喊、展示或攜帶此標語皆涉嫌違法及會被當局拘控。曾經塗滿大街小巷的示威語句，在國安法後不再復見，城市中的燥動被壓抑。

“Liberate Hong Kong, revolution of our times” is a slogan widely seen in the protests against Hong Kong's extradition bill in 2019. It was first used by Hong Kong Indigenous spokesman Edward Leung Tin Ki as his campaign theme and slogan for the 2016 New Territories East by-election.

On July 1, 2020, the Hong Kong government issued a statement declaring the slogan to involve Hong Kong independence, as having separatist and subversive connotations, and threaten the state sovereignty. Under the new law, the government may seek to prosecute those displaying or chanting the slogan. It was once seen all over the streets and alleys in Hong Kong, but now the city is suppressed and become inhibited.

When the government tries to paint over the political graffiti with grey squares, these rectangles speak an official statement to the city: A particular voice shall be louder than all another, a selected colour shall cover all another, a square shall substitute some specific words.

A mere 3,144 of Hong Kong's 7.5 million people are African, or of African descent, according to the 2016 Population By-census. But in the past five years, a massive 492 complaints of racial discrimination against them. In reality, that may be a conservative number.

A 2016 study by the Equal Opportunities Commission revealed that many members of ethnic minorities in Hong Kong would not consider filing a complaint, worried that they would be labeled "troublemakers". However, ethnically African people being born, raised and lived in the city feel that they are no different.

They are Hongkongers.

Portrait of Muvah, 21, sits at the Hong Kong MTR station in Central district, Hong Kong.

He opened up about his childhood experience regarding race. He was the only non-Chinese black student in his primary school.

"You can imagine how much difficulty I went through," Muvah recalled. "There is racism literally in every corner. One time I was standing in line as usual after a class recess. I happened to stand behind a girl, with whom I had never interacted before.

Muvah continues, "She told me, 'hey you shouldn't stand behind me or next to me. My mother told me if I do, I'll become black also.' It was the most insane thing to me. At that time I was nine years old and was still trying to figure out what racism is. This incident gave me an image of what it is and how it feels like." "People saw it, they heard it, but they didn't do anything. Even the teachers didn't react. I complained about that to the teacher but the girl received no punishment. Nothing. To me, that hurt hard even until today."

Muvah, 21, his friend Shafin chat from a rooftop's building in Jordan, Hong Kong.

Asked about the burgeoning Black Lives Matter rallies around the world, both Muvah shared his discomfort with the Hong Kong police.

Whenever Muvah sees the police on the streets, he has the urge to turn the other way to avoid them. He said he was surrounded by about 10 officers one evening for no apparent reasons, leaving him to feel threatened and unsafe.

Camy Lok, the President of the Hong Kong African Association, echoed with Muvah's experience. She said a burglary occurred in Kam Tin some years ago, and the local residents immediately associate that to the Africans living in the region, prompting the police to come check their members' ID cards.

Mulee, his brother, also possesses the same fear for Hong Kong police, but he has taken the approach to handle this head on, and with a bright smile on his face.

"There is a fear of being treated differently...I am going to be the exact opposite. I walk up to them, buttoned up, show a nice smile and say 'good morning, sir. How are you? I love your uniform.' I want to make them feel happy and not as a threat. [Hopefully,] they don't have to ask for my ID card. I am a local. I speak your language. No one needs to be afraid of me," said Mulee.

This approach stems from the teachings of their father.

"My Dad once told me to put a thought in people's head before they put one in theirs towards you. You better show them you are nice before they can think otherwise."

03

Businessman Daniel Udong, from the Republic of Cameroon, moved to Hong Kong in 2003.

Many local Hong Kongers still have an outdated and stereotypical image of dark-skinned people being refugees, when the African population in the city is quite diverse, Udong said.

"People would look at all Africans as being asylum-seekers or refugees. There is nothing bad being an asylum seeker or a refugee because a lot of people have had such an experience at one point. But when people stereotype all Africans as refugees or asylum seekers, it is really hurtful."

Despite the stinking stereotypes and sometimes hurtful racist gestures from the local residents, Udong embraces the cosmopolitan and calls it home.

"I feel that I am a Hong Konger even if the local people don't consider me as one. I lived most of my adult life here and I feel naturally attached to the city like most do. I feel entitled to the sense of belonging to the city, because I know Hong Kong more than my own country [Cameroon]," Udong said.

Everyday racism exists everywhere, including public transports.

"It was very difficult because there were not a lot of Africans living in Hong Kong. It was very visible when you go around in the city, in the MTR," said Udong. "When you sit down, people get up and leave some space between you and them instead. This also happens in the bus - people look at you like you are something different or strange."

Udong also said that people tend to cover their nostrils when they see him, like he has a bad smell. "I put on nice perfume and go out. I am a hygienic person. I ask myself - what did I do? Am I not clean? If so, why do people treat me that way?"

Helen (9) and Helen (12) at their house living room as they do homework in Sai Kung, Hong Kong.

They are two of the African children in Hong Kong who can speak and write fluent Cantonese and Chinese. Their parents - a local Hong Kong woman and a man from Nigeria, who met and got married in the city - sent them to local public schools in Wong Tai Sin that cater to ethnic minorities as well as local families.

However, discrimination in schools forced Helen and Esther to grow up quicker than children in the same age. Helen recalls that Caucasian children in her kindergarten said they did not want to hang out with her for her skin colour, singling her out so he could just look at other children having fun on the playground, soured.

In secondary school, she was also called names. "I would hide in a corner and cry. Teachers would tell them [the bullies] that they couldn't do that. Just because your skin colour is different, it doesn't mean you can do that," Helen said. "I received comments [from a classmate] that said I am black, I am fat and that I should go die," she added, with tears streaming from her eyes, breaking her calm facade for a moment.

Helen (12) uses the mobile app Tik Tok as the handwritten initials BLM (Black Lives Matter) are seen on her wrist.

Although Helen and Esther seem more collected and thoughtful than most young children, their hobbies are no different from most Gen Z - watching videos on social media, playing games on their mobile phones and streaming dance videos to their friends.

Asked about what they want to do when they grow up, Helen tilted her head and thought for a while, before replying, "I don't know, maybe a dancer?"

The elder sister enjoys watching local and western online celebrities streaming live videos, and likes to upload jazz dance videos of herself online, having learnt dancing for five years now. In school, she's the only African in her dance class along with about 20 other schoolmates consisting of Chinese and Filipinos, but she does not feel different - she feels like a normal 12- year-old there.

That is a feeling she hopes to embrace in other situations. "I hope they [Hong Kongers] don't have to care about our skin colour and our different cultures. I hope they treat us as a normal human being. We are equal."

Born and raised in Hong Kong with his siblings and parents from Sierra Leone, 19-year-old Mulee Kanagbo feels like he's a Hong Konger first.

"What makes a Hong Konger a Hong Konger? I believe that is not defined by race," Mulee says. "By looks and by blood, I am from Sierra Leone right? Everyone thinks that, but I have no connections to my country. I was born and raised here - everything I know is from this place in the world, this small city."

Mulee and his family currently live in a village house in Tuen Mun with a rooftop overlooking a mountain of trees. They have ample interactions with the local people, and to Mulee, they are not that different.

"I wish they understand that although I look different, dress differently, that my hair looks like a cotton ball and theirs are like silk, we all think the same. We are all a family. You are not better, I am not better. We should all be good friends who love each other and care about each other. That's all I want."

Mulee, 19, stands on Wan Chai MTR station as commuters pass him by in Hong Kong.

Similar to other African people, Mulee faces discrimination on public transports.

"I don't feel safe when there are a lot of people [in the train]," Mulee confessed. "I tend to always move away from the main crowd, because I am afraid that I'd be judged by how I look."

Oftentimes when I am standing, I notice that people give me very strange looks. I have this feeling that I don't fit in there because they see me as something else, which I don't feel that I am.

"Why can't I just be on a train or any public transports in general? I don't need to feel happy or good - I just want to be there like everyone else. I want to sit down on the train without second thoughts, scroll my phone and then get off like any others."

Jocular and bubbly, Mulee (C) sings his lungs out in a karaoke room, along with his equally passionate friends he knew from an international Christian church in Hong Kong.

"I noticed that when people have a stigma when they don't know something - they tend to usually associate it with something negative. [Local people would think] we have to prove to them that we are 'good' before they think about accepting us. That's what 'blackness' feels like.

We are not seen as horrendous, but we are seen as 'just not there yet' for Hong Kong people," Mulee added.

Hong Kongers have yet to develop racial sensitivity, as they are not entirely aware that they are doing something offensive to black people, Mulee said.

Gospel singers sing during a Sunday mass at a Christian African church, named The Light Of the World International Ministry Hong Kong, in Cheung Sha Wan, Hong Kong.

The church was founded by Joshua Leta from DR Congo, who gathers a crowd with multiple nationalities every Sunday to sing and pray.

Some international churches like these are important ways for Africans and ethnic minorities to integrate with the society.

African children in Hong Kong are subject to racial discrimination their whole lives, according to Camy Lok, President of the Hong Kong African Association. But in international churches, they are no different than anyone else.

19-year-old Mulee Kanagbo and his family originating from Sierra Leone used to go to a local church in Hong Kong, being the only black participants.

"Like a chicken among swans, it was obvious at the time that no matter how hard I tried, I would never truly fit in or belong. I've had some great memories there, but it was never such a place that I could comfortably call home," said Mulee.

Mulee started to enjoy church gatherings more until he joined an international one.

Brimming with bravery and positivity, 10-year-old Jazbet Nambiru neglected the strange stares from fellow Chinese Hong Kong onlookers and took the stage during a pro-police rally in Central amidst the anti-government protests, a day before a notorious assault in Yuen Long station that hurt at least dozens.

Pro-democracy protesters and many local residents grew increasingly antagonistic towards the Hong Kong police for their alleged brutality during rallies. Jazbet loves Hong Kong to the bones, and wanted to bridge the yawning gap between these two groups.

On stage, she detailed the pain pro-democracy protesters were going through for their cause, and called for pro-police participants to empathize with their "rival" group.

"We wanted to ask the government to go easy on crowd control. If they don't use lots of force, protesters also don't have to resort to violence. There must be an equal understanding so we can have peace in the city," said Mr Nambiru, who accompanied his daughter to the rally that day.

Many ethnic minority children in Hong Kong can speak and write Cantonese fluently, as they learn the language in school from an early age. Public schools in the city started teaching Chinese as a second language to ethnic minority children in 2014.

However, even if their language proficiency is high and are eligible for jobs as much as local Hong Kongers, ethnic minorities experience discrimination at workplace.

A 2018 study by the Lingnan University showed that some encountered discrimination seeking jobs or at work, including being called bad words in Cantonese by local coworkers who thought their darker-skinned colleagues cannot understand.

The lead researcher, Professor Lisa Leung, told SCMP, "there are more efforts to try to recognize the needs of ethnic minorities children to get them on par with the learning curve of the local children in terms of Chinese and Cantonese, but we still find that this curriculum is not pitching the level or the needs to the ethnic minorities children."

Muvah eats lunch at a local restaurant in Causeway Bay, Hong Kong.

The 2016 EOC report revealed that ethnic minorities often feel unwelcome at local restaurants and waiters are said to be not eager to serve them.

Luckily, for Mulee and Muvah, they mostly encounter positive experiences due to a lack of language barrier. Mulee said sometimes he is even treated as "an honoured guest."

Both brothers like local Cantonese cuisine for the "unique and diverse" flavours.

14

Helen (9) and Helen (12) play together on a swing near her home in Sai Kung, Hong Kong.

"Some say to our ears that we look very dark - I am not happy with that. We hear that sometimes when we play in the park," said Esther, who also shed a few tears listening to her older sister's confession.

The sisters said they tried to ignore these unwelcoming voices, who called them "chocolate girls" or "nasty black girls."

They said people tend to associate their dark skin colour to poor people with a bad smell. Similar to Udong, the sisters also found the local people who walk by them covering their noses. "They probably think we are bad people or have a bad smell, but we don't. We shouldn't do that to other people," said Helen. "I am sure if people cover their noses when they pass by them, they won't like that too. I think they should consider other people's feelings."

The racism Muvah faced did not stop at schools. When he tried looking for a job, his skin colour was a stumbling block to some local employers.

"I was looking for a job to work in the marketing industry. They told me that they would not accept me because I would not want to work with their colleagues. I told them I speak Cantonese, I was born and raised in Hong Kong, and have all the legal rights to stay and work here. They still turn me down simply because I am black. And that was straight to my face."

《疫情下的台灣日常》

2020 之春，世界傳來哀嚎，每天看著媒體發放生離死別的影像，鎖國、封城、隔離之聲不絕，是西班牙流感以來世界又一嚴峻的公共衛生危機。各大城市因疫情嚴重而癱瘓，傳來張張寂寞空城的照片，相對下，台灣自 1 月 21 日發現首宗確診個案，中港台接觸雖然頻繁，但台灣政府防疫措施奏效，市面不見得格外蕭條，只是潛藏一點焦慮不安，人與人的一點連繫漸漸削弱，政府勒令酒店舞廳停業，旅客大減而小黃司機往往向我吐苦，慣常光顧的早餐店也因疫情而休業，諸如此類的經濟損失。疫情下，台灣被國際視為抗疫的模範生，增長的是台灣人的身分認同和自豪感。衛生福利部長陳時中的民望一直高企，每天主持記者會，宣布新增確診數目及死亡人數，台北圓山飯店一度用房燈點起一個英文字：「ZERO」，展示台灣今天零確診。截至現在，台灣累計四百多例，普羅市民尚能維持日常生活。

Taiwan Daily life amid Covid-19

In the spring of 2020, wailings come from all parts of the world. Images of separation and death, endless words about quarantine, isolation and countries lockdown were released from the media every day. It is the world's most severe public health crisis since the Spanish flu. Photographs of empty cities are seen as major cities in the world are paralysed because of the pandemic.

In contrast, Taiwan has its first confirmed case of Covid-19 since January 21. Although Hong Kong-Taiwan exchanges still remain frequent, Taiwan government's prevention of epidemic is still working. The cities are not particularly desolate, there is only a bit of hidden anxiety looming around.

Connections between people become weaker gradually. The government ordered closure of bars and discos. The taxi driver grumbles about the lack of tourists. The breakfast shop is closed because of the pandemic. These are the examples of economic losses. Taiwan was an excellent model for anti-pandemic works in the world. Pride and identity of Taiwanese people increased because of this.

世紀的疫症，相較別人的苦難，對一個外來的港人影響微不足道，連無病呻吟的資格也沒。我減少本來很少的社交活動，大型群眾活動取消，甚至記者會也改為網上直播，悶在家裡久了，拿起卡繆的《瘟疫》，此刻還未讀完。無聊只好拍照，台灣邊緣都是海，想沿海岸線走一圈約1200公里，繞了幾公里，還是於街頭躊躇觀看算了。數月來，主要印象是口罩，在港人歇斯底里排隊買口罩，戲稱口罩為黃金之際，台灣人每星期限買兩個口罩，需要時得重用，或另購口罩套。後來「口罩國家隊」大量生產 Made In Taiwan 的口罩，供求穩定，一般民眾兩星期限買九個。戴著口罩的人坐捷運公車、上班上課、渡過了情人節和清明，由忘記帶口罩外出，到口罩成為生活必需品。說來，人的表情細緻微妙，但由香港反修例運動到台灣疫情，一時難以凝視罩下真實的臉孔。另外是對體溫的關注，在學校商場、旅遊熱點和捷運高鐵站等地，都有體溫探測儀或手持探額槍的檢測人員，螢幕能看到彩色的熱像，遇到體溫過高的人則禁止進場。市面的耳溫槍或探額槍一度難求，我買到是一支電子探熱針，有時狐疑自己生病就探熱，發現自己體溫老是徘徊於35°C至36°C之間。「嗯，偏低。」持探額槍的人曾如是說。

回港已是初夏，陽光燦爛，香港疫情緩和，數月前植根於SARS的恐懼消散，外來者須檢測後家居隔離14天，配上居家抗疫手帶，灰色，印有QR Code和不明數字。悶在家裡久了，偶爾回憶台北不知從哪裡來的流浪貓，同樣躊躇細步踏過長夜，也曾餵過幾回，那陣子晚上特別精神，可能體力過剩，也許失眠。

The exterior of Grand Hotel Taipei once illuminated to form the word "ZERO" to show Taiwan has zero confirmed cases that day. Up until now, Taiwan has some 400 cases, people can still live their normal lives.
